Macroeconomic environment

Transurban will continue to monitor the impact of the current geopolitical and macro-economic environment. The duration and extent of any impacts will depend on geopolitical developments in key energy-producing regions, government policy decisions and the broader macroeconomic response.

Transurban's roads form important urban transport infrastructure and are integral to motorists' everyday activities, helping keep Australia's capital cities moving. Historically, Transurban has demonstrated resilience in periods of market dislocation, with more than 90% of revenue CPI-linked or with fixed escalations. In addition, Transurban's roads provide more fuel efficient and safer alternatives for road users.

Transurban continues to provide support through Linkt Assist and encourages customers experiencing financial hardship to make contact for assistance. Community organisations experiencing increased demand, such as those providing emergency relief and supporting personal transport, may be eligible for Transurban's community grants program, which has been expanded to provide more immediate assistance with cost-of-living pressures. Additionally, Transurban has brought forward its payment terms with small suppliers to 14 days from 30.
