Domino's to appeal Gall Class Action judgment

Domino's Pizza Enterprises Limited (ASX:DMP) (Domino's) intends to appeal the decision in the Gall class action.

The proceedings were commenced on 24 June 2019 and reasons for judgment handed down on 22 July 2026. Murphy J made orders on 3 August 2026, including that Domino's pay Mr Gall $11,869.33 plus interest as well as Mr Gall's costs of the proceeding, including the initial trial, to be assessed on a lump sum basis.

Domino's is currently seeking agreement, and will consider applying for an order if required, to stay the costs order until the determination of the appeal.

Domino's potential wider exposure under the decision to alleged group members is uncertain and unquantifiable because it depends on a separate hearing and determination in relation to the members of the group, the number of those members, each member's individual claim of causation and the individual calculation of loss and the exhaustion of all avenues of appeal available to Domino's or other group members.

It is not possible at this stage to determine the financial impact of the judgment on Domino's, if any, due to the uncertainties above and the outcome of the stay application. Domino's will keep the market informed in accordance with its disclosure obligations.

This release has been authorised for release by the Board of Directors.
